Location

Newtown St Boswells is a small town in the Scottish Borders, located near the River Tweed. It serves as the administrative centre for the Scottish Borders Council, making it an important hub for local government. The town is situated between Melrose and St Boswells, with easy access to the A68 road, which connects Edinburgh to northern England. The village has a quiet, rural character, with a mix of residential areas, local shops, and businesses. It has historical roots dating back centuries and is close to several scenic landmarks, including the Eildon Hills and Dryburgh Abbey. The surrounding countryside offers opportunities for walking, cycling, and outdoor activities. Newtown St Boswells benefits from its proximity to well-known Border towns like Melrose and Jedburgh, which attract visitors with their rich history and attractions. The town has a small but close-knit community, and its role as the council headquarters ensures a steady presence of workers and public services.
